

Víctor Manuel González – Biography

Víctor Manuel González Reynoso, widely known as Víctor González, is a Mexican actor born on September 10, 1973, in Tequisquiapan, Querétaro.

The nephew of renowned composer Óscar Reynoso, González showed an early passion for the arts. At the age of 15, he began studying music with the dream of forming a band. However, at 18, after moving to Mexico City, he discovered his true calling in acting and enrolled in the prestigious Centro de Educación Artística (CEA) of Televisa to begin his professional training.

He made his acting debut in 1995 in the television series Bajo un mismo rostro. His career gained momentum with roles in major TV Azteca productions such as Mirada de mujer and Azul tequila, where he quickly drew attention for his strong screen presence and compelling performances. In 1999, he appeared in Marea brava and landed his first leading role in the telenovela Besos prohibidos.

Over the years, Víctor González has become a familiar face in Latin American television, starring in a wide range of successful telenovelas and series, including La duda, El amor no tiene precio, and La candidata. He has also appeared in films such as El precio de nuestra sangre (2000) and 7 años de matrimonio (2013), showcasing his range and adaptability across genres.

Known for his emotional depth and versatility, González has portrayed a broad spectrum of characters, from romantic leads to complex antagonists. Despite his public success, he has remained discreet about his personal life, choosing to focus on his craft and professional development.

With a career spanning over two decades, Víctor Manuel González remains a prominent figure in Latin American entertainment, celebrated for his talent, dedication, and enduring presence on screen.
